Owed Life to Americans.

The four Villiatas were captured by American troopers near El Valle. The Americans learned their hiding place from a priest who had good cause for hate the bandit chieftain. The Carrangista has the American soldiers to thank for his life. He was liberated after the rout of General Hernandes's command at Guerrera. "Where was Villa during the raid?" was then asked.

"Villa? O, he stay at gate. He come into town. Lopez, he come in. After gringoes come with sputter sputter gun, Villa he ride back Las Palomas with tolden ones, an join Lopez at Asconsion."

All five of the Villimas frankly admit their part in the Cobinbus massacre. The thing their cannot understand is why their accords are being dressed daily, and why their execution is being so long delayed. Told that they may not be executed, they merely stare unbellessingly.
